About spAce...

We live in space, in these spaces, these towns, this countryside, these corridors, these rooms. That seems obvious to us. Perhaps indeed it should be obvious. But it isn`t obvious. It`s real, obviously, and as a consequence most likely rational. We can touch. We can even allow ourselves to dream. There`s nothing, for example, to stop us from imaging things that are neither towns nor countryside. There`s nothing to stop us from imaging space…

spAce starts with the generic, the ordinary and the everyday; but it also carries the virtual, immaterial and the impalpable.

The exhibition comprises fragments of the students` journey into the ambivalent territory of spAce. These are not intended as convincing statements of fact, rather as the internal workings of design process, revealing tenuous inter-connections between multiplied and diversified bits of spAce. The work is displayed in a temporary place in the "city centre" of Aberdeen and in the permanent premises of the Scott Sutherland School of Architecture & Built Environment on the "edge" of the city.

This exhibition attempts to explore the notion of spAce as a process where the concepts, ideas and intentions take precedence over the final projects. Within this embryonic landscape, the ideal is only visible in a dim light. It can be a frightening `plAce` where nothing is fixed or certain. The conviction needed to stake a route through this territory can only be refined through the personal experience of ordinary spAce.

Isolating drawings and models from their educational context makes their vision vulnerable. This collage traces from an individual fragment to unexpected wider contexts.
